Last week, when John McCain told the world \(including our enemies\) that our National Security is a mess, I didn't think he could sink any lower. I was wrong.

During a speech at the Munich Security Conference in Germany, John McCain stood on stage and blasted America.

First, McCain suggested the Western world is uniquely imperiled this year — even more so than when Barack Obama was president. He then questioned if we could even survive.

“In recent years, this question would invite accusations of hyperbole and alarmism; not this year,” McCain said. “If ever there were a time to treat this question with a deadly seriousness, it is now.”

He went on to attack everything that is “wrong with America” right now. The digs were obviously directly at our president. Speaking about the Western World McCain said:

“[The founders of the Munich conference] would be alarmed by an increasing turn away from universal values and toward old ties of blood and race and sectarianism.”

“They would be alarmed by the hardening resentment we see towards immigrants and refugees and minority groups — especially Muslims.”

“They would be alarmed by the growing inability — and even unwillingness — to separate truth from lies.”

“They would be alarmed that more and more of our fellow citizens seem to be flirting with authoritarianism and romanticizing it as our moral equivalent.”

John McCain has gone too far with this one. To go to a foreign nation and trash the United States is unforgivable. John McCain is a disgrace as a Senator and an embarrassment to our country.
